

Water is Cold in Sealy Lake For Fishermen

Last Sunday afternoon Dave Heenan and C. W. Dawson had about as close a call as they care for at this stage of their young lives. They have decided that the water in Sealy lake is about as cold on the first of May as at any other time, and that heavy clothes and rubber boots are not much protection against the cold and a poor help in swimming.

Sunday afternoon the above two with several others went to the lake to clear out the creeks and get ready for the shipment of trout spawn that is expected daily from the south. Dawson and Heenan started in to fish and were using the boat. One of the cast too enthusiastically and upset the craft. They are both good swimmers, but Dawson had quite a time making shore. He had on hip rubber boots and a heavy hunting jacket. As these filled with water he found it more difficult to navigate. He was delighted to see a helping hand extended to him as he felt the shore line receding. Heenan made the grade with difficulty and helped his companion.

Dawson lost most of a new outfit of tackle but was glad Heenan got out alright. They went back on Wednesday to get the fish.

Self-Denial Week

Next week is Self-Denial Week with the Salvation Army, and Capt. Houghton will call on his friends and supporters early in the week for his annual collection. The Salvation Army is doing good work and is worthy of support. This year General Booth is celebrating his 70th birthday during Self-Denial Week, and he has sent out a special request that an extra effort be made at this time to increase the revenue of the Army.

Minister Returned

Rev. T. D. Proctor returned on Wednesday evening from Vancouver, where he attended a meeting of the board of governors of the Anglican Theological College in connection with the building of the new $150,000 college at Point Grey. As a member of the board, Rev. Mr. Proctor addressed a luncheon gathering of that body at the Hotel Grosvenor on the previous Wednesday. On Sunday he went out into the Fraser Valley, and preached at Abbotsford, Bradner, and Watkins Road. Vancouver, he states, is humming with its greatest business activity since 1911. The early spring in the south is as marked as it is here, Mr. Proctor says. Early strawberries are already making their appearance there.

Hospital Day Program Now All Arranged

The sports committee connected with the annual Hospital Day on May 12th have prepared the following program of sports to begin at two o'clock sharp with a baseball game between the whites and the natives. A collection will be taken to defray the expenses. Following the game the crowd will be moved to the hospital lawn where the racing will take place. Fourteen events will be run off including races for girls four, six, eight and ten years and for boys four, six, eight and ten years; girls, open, egg and spoon race; boys, open, boot and shoe race; ladies balloon race; ladies nail driving contest; boys apple eating contest; nurses throwing base ball.

The reception at the nurses home and at the hospital will be on all afternoon and light refreshments will be served.

A splendid program for the evening concert is being arranged. The concert is to be followed by a dance. A charge of one dollar per gentleman will be made for the dance.

Building a New Store

Work was started this week on a new store building for Smith's General Store. It is being erected on the lot in front of the home of Mr. and Mrs. Myros. There will be a large basement and the store will provide much greater floor space than the old building. The interior fixtures will be such as to enable the management to display the stock to advantage and also protect it from dust. There will be good light and the present plans provide for furnace heating. Mr. Myros believes the new store will fully justify the expenditure and he proposes to make it as modern as possible.

Take the High Road

The road through the Valley is in pretty good shape now, but for the love of Mike don't take the short road from Moricetown into Smithers. We went that way, but no more until the road gang gets through and then some. A good feature about that road, however, is that there are some very fine people living along it. They do not hesitate to help one out of holes when called upon.

The Smithers Athletic Association gave a dance last Monday night for the benefit of the rink manager who did not do so very well last winter. The dance was a big success and it was most enjoyable too. Gazeley's orchestra provided excellent music.

The old tram line of the Rocher de Boule is now being taken down by Geo. Hall and associates.

New Hazelton Celebration on Victoria Day

The plans for the 24th of May celebration at New Hazelton are now underway. The Community League will have charge and last Saturday night the League was re-organized and the different committees were appointed.

The officers are — President, Mrs. W. S. Sargent; Vice-president, Mrs. F. A. Goddard; Secretary-treasurer, Mrs. Parent. Ex-Committee—S. H. Senkpiel, C. H. Sawle, R. J. Morrison, P. Spooner, Mrs. Denno, J. H. Wilan, Mrs. Thornton, Mrs. Spooner.

The various committees for the afternoon and the evening doings were appointed and a program will be ready to announce in next weeks issue.

The season was so early that the roads have been put in good shape for travelling. The people in Smithers are coming down in large numbers and will help to make it a big day in New Hazelton. Many will motor down on Sunday and stay over so that every effort should be made to provide accommodation.

In the month of April 3,000,000 pounds of fish were disposed of in Prince Rupert.

A deal is practically completed where by the Premier Gold Mining Co. will purchase the Indian mine at Stewart.

Services will be held at the usual hour in the New Hazelton church Sunday morning.

Major Burbank with his wife and sister arrived from Prince George Thursday morning for a few days outing. They are at the Omineca Hotel.

Lode mining has only been in progress about 25 years, and only about one-half of the Province has been prospected; 200,000 square miles of unexplored mineral bearing lands are open for prospecting.

The mining laws of this Province are more liberal and the fees lower than any other Province in the Dominion or any Colony in the British Empire. Mineral locations are granted to discoverers for nominal fees. Absolute titles are obtained by developing such properties, security of which is guaranteed by crown grants.

N.B.—Practically all British Columbia mineral properties upon which work has been done are described in some one of the Annual Reports of the Minister of Mines. Those considering mining investments should refer to such reports. They are available without charge on application to the Department of Mines, Victoria, B.C. Reports of the Geological Survey of Canada, Pacific Building, Vancouver, are recommended as valuable sources of information.

Men Will Visit
Mines in District

At a general meeting of the Omineca Branch of the B.C. Chamber of Mines, held in Smithers last week, a number of routine matters was disposed of and a large budget of business transacted.

Messrs. C. Price Green and R. C. W. Lett, of the Resources Department of the Canadian National Railways, are expected to visit the district at an early date and will be taken by the officials of the organization to see some of the principal mining properties in the vicinity. Details of the arrangements in this connection were laid over until date and duration of the visit are known.

The reference library and reading room of the Branch has now been opened, and all interested in the mining industry are welcome to use it. Almost every official publication of the Dominion and provincial departments of mines dealing with any part of the Omineca Mining Division has been secured for the reference library, and various mining and other publications have been obtained for the reading room. The samples of typical ores and typical rocks obtained from the mines department at Ottawa are also set out.

Through the co-operation between the Branch and the provincial organization at Vancouver, several interested parties have already been put in touch with properties in the district. Two, at least, of these new men contemplate making examinations this season with a view to taking up claims for development.

The census of claims and particulars which is being made for the whole district is going on, and many prospectors' samples have already been gathered together for a district exhibit at Vancouver and Victoria. Copies of the information in this census have been sent to the chamber of mines in Vancouver and also to the officials of the Canadian National Railways, who are giving fullest assistance.

A number of new members have joined in the last few weeks but there are still some prospectors who have failed to appreciate the value of this organized effort to further the mining industry in the district.

Woodcock

Mrs. A. Hobensheld and Mrs. R. Doll were Kitwanga visitors.

Mrs. Wiggins and family, of Cedarvale, spent a couple of days with Mrs. W. Brand.

Mr. and Mrs. Hodkin, who have been spending the winter in Prince Rupert, returned to their ranch on Sunday.

S. Doig was a Woodcock visitor on Sunday.

Mrs. J. Borsuk and son, Paul, spent Wednesday at Pacific.

Bob Emmerrette, formerly of Woodcock, and now of Hanall, was here on Tuesday.

"Slim" Jordan stopped off at Woodcock on Tuesday night, on his way to Hanson's camp.

Applications for pre-emption are to be addressed to the Land Commissioner of the Land Recording Division in which the land applied for is situated, and are made on printed forms, copies of which can be obtained from the Land Commissioner.

Pre-emption must be occupied for five years and improvements made to the value of $10 per acre, including clearing and cultivating at least five acres, before a Crown Grant can be received.

For more detailed information see the Bulletin, "How to Pre-empt Land."

FISHING BY TORCHLIGHT

AN INDIAN LEGEND

RECOUNTED BY (MRS.) ROXY L. TOMLINSON

(Concluded)

The chief was surprised to see his daughter and thought something dreadful must have befallen to break thus the custom of his people. Cumsha Clatz was trembling with fear, but she called her mother and brothers, and before them all related the story of her life at the hut; how, against her own reason, she had permitted a man to visit her cabin and had in time become his wife; how she had found that Gahoot and Owsh were one and the same. Then came the hardest part of her trying ordeal as she told of her expectant motherhood.

The old chief was very angry. He bade his sons follow Gahoot and bring him back, dead or alive. He ordered Cumsha Clatz to return to the hut and remain there until her baby was born, and he would then decide what the form of her punishment should be. Without a word the princess left and went back to the hut which had sheltered her so long and seen her disgrace.

Cumsha Clatz was very lonely now, and often went hungry. She missed the fresh meat that Gahoot had so amply supplied. Her mother visited her at intervals and brought food, but never exchanged words; she came and went in silence. As the time nearer the girl became more and more despondent. Her cup of sorrow was full enough, but she was not prepared for the overflowing; for, instead of a baby to cuddle and love, there were born to her four little puppies, three male and one female. How she felt this added disgrace! Yet she loved the helpless little animals. Gahoot had been good to her in his way, and now he was dead. She made up her mind that she would protect and care for the puppies and that no harm should come to them.

When next her mother visited her and found that Cumsha Clatz was the mother of four healthy puppies, the older woman's disgust and humiliation were keen. The girl felt very badly, but no argument her mother brought forward could convince Cumsha Clatz that the right thing to do was to kill the puppies.

The mother went home heartsick, for she knew that her daughter would be punished severely, so very proud was the old chief of his family name.

The chief, when told of his grand-puppies, was wrathful. It was bad enough before, but this was too much. Humiliated, his heart was cold towards his daughter who had so disgraced him before his people. He decided that she should be left alone in the hut without fire and without food. The princess begged that a fire be left, but the chief was determined. Now the tribe made preparations to leave the scene of their chief's disgrace.

The old woman, who was a particular friend of Cumsha Clatz, touched by her sad face and evident fate, whispered to the girl as the tribe was departing, to dig beside the posts of the big house and she would find fire, but to make haste as soon as they were out of sight. Cumsha Clatz thanked her. Now, she felt, there was at least a chance for life.

When the tribe had disappeared she hurried to the place where the old woman had buried the fire, and, sure enough, the coals were there, although barely red. She made haste to get twigs and bark, and soon had a glowing blaze. Cumsha Clatz was delighted. It meant everything to her and her little family to have warmth, and, also, she could now fish by torchlight on the river.

Every night she would leave the puppies, take a torch, and go down to the river to fish. Her days were spent in getting wood and setting snares for rabbits and grouse, for she found that her growing puppies were just as hungry as growing children. Cumsha Clatz was happy when she was working, but there was much time for thinking. How lonely she felt! She longed to hear a human voice, but there was none in the grim solitude of the woods. Of little use was it to hope that the chief would return; his word was law, and nothing short of a catastrophe would cause him to revoke it. Life was becoming more and more unbearable, and its monotony was broken only by the yelps of her puppies, yelps which always gave a heartache, since she realized that she had caused all the misfortune by her own act of disobedience. Still she did not cease to love the little ones, and as time went on she depended more and more on their company, and looked forward to their happy yelps when she would return from her snares.

One night when Cumsha Clatz was on the beach with her torch, she was alarmed on looking up, to see the hut all lit up, through the chinks, and thought she could discern the forms of children dancing. She ran up to the hut as fast as she could, but when she arrived she found her puppies looking very innocent, and the blaze which had so illuminated everything had mysteriously died away.

Every night the puppies waited for their mother to start fishing, then they would hop out of their skins and run around. To make it more exciting they threw dry grass on the fire and by the ensuing flare the three boys would dance and race and jump around the fire in great glee. The little girl, for modesty's sake, only removed the skin from her head and shoulders, and she was set to watch. As soon as the mother showed signs of leaving the river the girl would warn her brothers, so that nothing unusual was apparent when the mother returned.

Cumsha Clatz had grown suspicious as night after night she watched the hut, and decided to trick her children. When next she went fishing she set up a mat of cedar bark on the beach, to make it look as though she were there. Beside the dummy she placed her torch. Then stealthily she made her way back to the hut and looked through a crack. What was her joy to behold, instead of her puppies, three wildly dancing boys. Watching her chance, the mother, palpitant with delight, made one mad rush into the hut, gathered the skins in one sweep of her arms, and threw them into the blazing fire. The sister, who was only partly uncovered, pulled her skin over her, and so remained a pup; the brothers, surprised, stood before their mother in human form.

The princess was overjoyed. She longed to be able to tell her people of her good fortune. As the boys grew up they took to hunting naturally. Cumsha Clatz taught them all she knew about the art. The boys developed into strong young men, and the mother was well-nigh happy. Yet there were many times when she thought of her people and wondered if they had fared as well as she, for now she was wealthy in furs and never without plenty of food.

As a matter of fact, the old chief and his tribe had not prospered since they abandoned the princess to her fate. The mother was often sad as she thought of her daughter, who must long ere this have passed to the happy hunting grounds.

After some years the chief decided to return to his old camping place. He was getting old, and longed for the surroundings of his boyhood. At her hut Cumsha Clatz was one day busy with her family, skinning an animal, when she was startled to hear the sound of human voices. All intent they listened, until, assured that they were not deceived, the five started in the direction of the sounds. The princess and her three hunter sons were a magnificent spectacle as they walked along the river's edge. With every nerve on edge they watched the river, not knowing whether enemies or friends approaching. They kept in the shelter of the underbrush. In a few minutes the canoes turned a bend in the river, and as they came close in to beach, Cumsha Clatz recognized her father's voice. Whispering to her sons that their grandfather had come back with his tribe, she rushed to the beach and joyously welcomed her people.

Thus was the spot where Hazelton now stands named Kitwan-makz, "Fishing by Torchlight." Today the head chief of the Hazelton Indians claims to be a direct descendant of a family of puppies.
